PURE HAVANA

A Visit to Havana Cuba

✓ Produced by Ford Motor Company ✓

Released through Woldwyn

Standing on an elevation commanding the harbor stands "Old Morro", grim and foreboding, a relic of Spanish rule.

And right here is where the battleship Maine was blown up.

Strange ways, the Spanish tongue, narrow streets and quaint buildings, proclaim to the tourist that he is in a foreign land.

The Malecon, where mingle pleasure throngs listening to soft music and caressed by gentle breezes from the Gulf.

Havana is Cuba's capitol, so here is housed her Government ---- The House of Representatives.

The Senate Building.

In Cuba the president lives in a "Palace".

From soup to nuts for this is the famous Colon market where Cuba does her shopping.

Fruit sellers bringing their wares to market.

They never get "Ox-cited".

The Carcel and presidio, where guests enjoy the hospitality of the Government, for Carcel in Spanish is jail.

The Columbus Cathedral, where tradition has it certain bones of the great explorer lie enshrined. Christopher apparently was very bony, at least, he's secured an excellent distribution of his bony parts.

The Prado, a fashionable promenade and drive.

La Fuente de la India

(Indian Fountain)

a remarkable fountain in marble, done in Rome.

Columbus Park.

Havana is devoted to the drama and opera, while the National Theatre, built in 1837, at a cost of $500,000.00 is one of the finest theatres in the world.

Monument to Jose Marti, Cuba's great apostle of freedom.

Statue of General Francisco de Albear, famous Cuban engineer who established the Vento water system.

The ancient Spanish fortress La Fuerza, a cherished relic of the city's remote past. Built in 1538 to defend Havana from the ravagings of "Pyrates".

The water front where gather ships from the seven seas.

Cuban Babies are raised on Donkey milk - Ought to make good cheer leaders--eh?

Ships that pass in the night.
